Abstract

The musical culture in urban communities of the North-Eastern Slovakia from the mid-16th century can be searched on three basic issues: what changes in the musical culture were brought by Reformation in multi-ethnic and multi-confessional milieu; how was the musical life in major centres and in minor localities (cities) of Spiš and Šariš influenced by the development of Lutheran urban cantorates in Central Europe; what was the role of local (domestic) musicians in the cantorates (cantors, organists, trumpeters) within this process. The study deals with new findings in archival documents focused on personalities (J. Fabri, L. Stöckel, J. Plotz, G. Plotz) and their activities in the free royal cities and in smaller towns – the centres of musical life (Bardejov, Prešov, Levoča, Kežmarok, Spišská Nová Ves).

The research of the musical culture in urban centres of North-Eastern Slovakia (northern part of the historical Hungarian Kingdom) during the period of Reformation (1540–1674) has been within the Slovakian historiography chronologically classified as part of the Early Modern Period (1526–1711).¹ The defeat of the Hungarian army at the battle of Mohacs on 29 August 1526 by Ottoman-Turkish troops resulted in disintegration of the Hungarian Kingdom and in relocating of many centres of cultural life into untouched regions of Upper Hungary and Transylvania. This process went in parallel with the emergence of Humanism and Reformation in Europe, with direct impacts on the further cultural and social development of the said regions.

The threat of the Turkish expansion has been present during the whole time of the constitution and strengthening of the Habsburg monarchy, as well as the process of denominationalisation within the religious communities. On one hand the status of Reformed Church congregations (mainly moderate, Evangelical) increased, on the other hand the recatholisation efforts of the Habsburgs gained momentum. Confessional ambitions constituted one of the reasons of the anti-Habsburg uprisings, led by influential Hungarian noblemen (Bocskay, Bethlen, Rákóczi, Wesselény, Thököly). The recatholisation reached its peak in the years of 1673–1674 with the trials of Evangelical pastors followed by their persecution. The aftermath of the recatholisation hit also the urban centres of North-Eastern Slovakia. Many Evangelical pastors and public figures had to leave the region to exile and find asylum in Silesia or in Germany.²

The Reformation influenced the development of the music culture in towns in an appositive way. This was the case in both the major centres of musical life (Pressburg/Bratislava, Košice) as well as in other free royal towns (Trnava, Trenčín, Skalica, Zvolen, Levoča, Kežmarok, Bardejov, Prešov, Sabinov a Krupina) and in the mining towns (Kremnica, Banská Štiavnica, Banská Bystrica, Banská Belá, Nová Baňa, Pukanec a Ľubietová). The regions of Spiš, Šariš and eastern Abov were not directly hit by Turkish attacks thus music life in the towns enjoyed better conditions. Renaissance and later Baroque polyphonic and polychoral music was cultivated in the parish churches at a considerably high level.³ The existence of Lutheran municipal cantorates is well documented in the region of Spiš/Zips: from mid-16th century on Levoča and from the beginning of the 17th century in other minor towns of the county like Ľubica, Spišská Belá, Spišská Sobota, Poprad, Matejovce, Spišské Vlachy, Spišské Podhradie, Spišská Nová Ves and Smolník.⁴ The music repertoire of these Lutheran cantorates of that period is well documented in two musical collections: Levoča/Leutschau Lutheran Musical Collection (SK-Le) a Bardejov/Bartfeld Lutheran Musical Collection (H-Bn)⁵. One can follow the details of the musical life not only from musical sources but also from different types of archival sources: parish registers (birth-registers, obituaries, wedding-registers), registers of new burghers, account books, memorial books and personal correspondence. All these documents provide precious information for further research of the musical life: names and work descriptions of musicians and manufacturers of musical instruments, their migrations and personal histories, a typology of musical professions, the existence of musical institutions, the social status of municipal musicians (cantors, organists, trumpeters) and other personalities as pastors, rectors and donors or supporters of musical culture.⁶

Transmission of musical culture

The development of musical life in the towns of North-Eastern Slovakia was supported by the newly established reformist schools that introduced quality musical education. A key role in this process is to be attributed to the Lutheran theologian and school rector in Bardejov (the region of Šariš) Leonard Stöckel (1510–1560). Leonard Stöckel had studied in Wittenberg and was a close friend of Philipp Melanchthon. He started his professional career in Bardejov as a cantor and conductor of the choir of St. Egidius'. In 1540, he elaborated a set of principles titled Leges scholae Bartensis with the aim to reform the municipal school. These rules were subsequently applied by him also in his own school management practice. Leonard Stöckel's texts of music have been preserved in the region of Spiš, in a composite volume shelfmark N 139 (olim S 38956), containing 21 handwritten and printed units (Lyceum Library in Kežmarok).⁷

The composite volume includes unique manuscripts of Stöckel: a textbook on mathematics called Arithmetica, two textbooks on music – De musica I and De musica II, as well as Nicolaus Listenius's textbook De Musica | A Johanne Maioris Exposita. All these works were copied in 1567 by Johannes Fabri, rector of the school in Spišská Belá. Stöckel was evidently familiar with treatises on musical theory published in the 16th century. In the concept of his De Musica textbooks, he drew on the German Lutheran theoreticians Nicolaus Listenius and Heinrich Faber. Listenius studied in Wittenberg almost at the same time as Stöckel; that is why Stöckel was not only familiar with Listenius's first two textbooks Rudimenta musicae (Wittenberg 1533) and Musica (Wittenberg 1537); he knew their author personally.

The transmission of the ideas of the Reformation was a natural process – mediated by students, booksellers, tradesmen, any by the migration of clergymen and teachers. One of the main hubs of musical interaction was Wrocław/Breslau, a wealthy town in Lower Silesia, where Lutheran divine services took place in Saint Mary Magdalene's Church as early as in 1523. Nysa/Neisse, Opole/Oppeln and Zgorzelec/Görlitz were also famous Lutheran centres.⁸ As documented on the first page of the Kežmarok volume “Conscriptus Görlicij Anno 1566”, the rector of the school in Spišská Belá, Johannes Fabri, lived in Zgorzelec in 1566. It was at that time, when a school in Zgorzelec was transformed into a Lutheran Gymnasium Augsteum and became famous partly because of its high standards in teaching and cultivating music. Johannes Fabri brought with him to Spiš two prints by Petrus Vincentius, the rector of the school in Zgorzelec. These books became part of the composite volume of Kežmarok – D. Erasmi Roterodami De Civilitate Morvm pverilium libellus and Inicia Doctrinae Arithmeticae olim a Glareano Tradita (1566). In Zgorzelec, Fabri also copied Listenius's textbook of music.

The transmission of musical culture took place within the territory belonging that time in its entirety to the reign of the Habsburg dynasty. The principal destination of the peregrinations was Wrocław – at that time a town several times larger than all the three major Upper Hungarian municipal centres – the free royal towns of Levoča, Prešov and Bardejov. Levoča, in mid 17th century counting some 4000 inhabitants, could be compared with the Silesian town of Brzeg/Brieg, while Wrocław was much larger (ca 40 thousand around the year 1675). The Wrocław Lutheran Community had at its disposal three principal churches and seven further affiliated branches. Both Levoča and Bardejov Lutheran Community had at their disposal one principal church serving the German-speaking community and one minor church for Slovak-speaking worshippers. A specific multiethnic environment could be found in Prešov with three Lutheran Communities:

a German-speaking, a Slovak-speaking and a Hungarian-speaking one. The Lutheran cantorates in the towns of North-Eastern Slovakia were established under direct influence of cantorates in Central Germany and in Silesia. Chronologically, the first evidence of regular payments to singers of the municipal Lutheran cantorate in Levoča are documented from mid-16th century (Dem Cantory sein tysch, Schulmeister, Astanten). Later, the names are documented as well; cantors: Valentin Miska in Levoča 1580 – 1600, Zacharias Wier from Berlin in Kežmarok since 1596, Joachim Leibitzer in Spišské Vlachy since 1592, Georg Bartholomaeus in Spišská Nová Ves, cantor Caspar Stein in Levoča etc. From the mid-17th century, music of domestic composers has been preserved, as well: of Thomas Gosler, an exulant from Flensburg, notary in Kežmarok 1625–ca 1646; of Samuel Marckfelner, an organist in Levoča 1648–1674, of Georg Wirsinger, a school rector in Spišská Nová Ves, 1625–1628; or of Johann Schimrack sen., organist in Spišské Podhradie 1630–1657.

Details of the musical life are documented since the beginning of the 17th century. A list of musical instruments in charge of the municipal trumpeter, dated 1635, has been preserved in the Memorial book deposited in the municipal archive of Spišská Nová Ves.⁹ The testament of Anna Feüchter, the widow of a well-off Mayor of Spišská Nová Ves has been preserved in Municipal Judicial Book (1622); this testament contains information about donating part of her property to the Fraternitas Litteratorum. The widow bequeathed her property to the town's parish pastors (German and Slovak) as well as the Löbliche Fraternitet Literator[um] of which her son Peter Feüchter was an active member.¹⁰ Here, the literary fraternity preserved its urban character as well as its system of guild organisation longer into the 17th century, than it was the case elsewhere in Europe. In Spiš, Fraternitas litteratorum combined thorough German music tradition of Lutheran cantorates with multi-ethnic Slovak-German environment. Beside of that, a municipal musical society Collegium Musicum existed in Spišská Nová Ves.¹¹

There are lot of references to musical contacts and interactions of students, teachers, musicians and priests with Silesian subjects.¹² The records document to purchases of books and songbooks in Silesian towns or, on the other hand, to activities of Silesian rectors and cantors in urban communities of the North-Eastern Slovakia: 1601: “*Inventarium Benedicti Johans Verlassenschaft: ... Musical sources and musical personalities

The musical manuscripts preserved in the part A of the Levoča/Leutschau Lutheran Musical Collection are also great sources of information of learning about musical contacts, musical repertory and the music of domestic composers. The most important among them are six tablature-books SK-Le, MUS A 1–MUS A 6 and one partiture-book SK-Le, MUS A 74: 1) tablature-book shelfmark MUS A 1 (olim 13990a), the so-called Caspar Plotz Tablature, created by one copy writer (attributed to Caspar Plotz); 2) tablature-book shelfmark MUS A 2 (olim 13990b), the so-called Johann Plotz Tablature, created by three copy writers; this tablature was formerly called The Second Tablature of Caspar Plotz, because the first 31 works have been written by the same copyist as in the tablature MUS A 1;¹⁸ new affiliation was created in 1985 after identification of the manuscript of Johann Plotz as a one of the three copyist;¹⁹ 3) tablature-book shelfmark MUS A 3 (olim 13992), the so-called Johann Schimrack sen. Tablature II.); 4) tablature-book shelf-

The personality of Tobias Haigerius is unknown. According to the annals of Caspar Hain, Jacob Luschmann was a member of Levoča’s municipal council in 1648: “Volgen die H. H. Vormündt, sambt der gantzen Löblichen Gemein: ... H. Jacob Luschmann. Leinweber.”²⁵

The Plotz family

Few information has been preserved as far as the identity of the writers of Plotz Tablatures. The copyist of the first tablature (MUS A 1) is evident from the title page: “Caspar Plotz | 1603”. This is the oldest record about any Plotz family member in Spiš. In earlier literature Caspar Plotz used to be mentioned hypothetically as organist in Levoča, in relationship with Johann Plotz (?–1680), who served as organist here in the period of 1641–1648. Beside of him, Georg Plotz (?–1661) served as an organist in Kežmarok in the years of 1639–1649, and later, in the period of 1650–1661 he became the organist of the parish German church in Prešov/Eperies (region of Šariš). This fact provoked a hypothesis that Johann and Georg might have been brothers, since Johann worked in 22 In musicological literature the family name of Johann Schimrock has long been written as ‘Šimbracký’. This incorrect use of the composer’s name comes from an incorrect reading of the genitive case of the word Schim(b)racki; with Latin suffix -ii as Schimbrackii, Schimrockii and exchanging the genitive case to the nominative case. Levoča almost in parallel to Georg in Kežmarok.²⁶ There is, however, no archival evidence in the sources of Slovak archives testifying to this hypothesis.

After 1989, the potential for widening the heuristic research increased, as well as the possibility of international cooperation. Based on this new research a new information related to the genealogical research of the Plotz family in Central Europe was disclosed. This is a possessor's entry “Johannes Plotz Vom Brieg | Caspar Plo(tz) organist | zu brieg in der PfarrHer | Kirch”, to be found in a musical collection of Polish proveniences deposited in the former Preußischen Staatsbibliothek Berlin, tablature-book shelfmark Ms. mus. 40056. This comes from the original musical collection in Wrocław, currently deposited in Biblioteka Jagiellońska, Kraków PL-Kj.²⁷ According to this entry Caspar Plotz was an organist in Brzeg (Brieg). The relationship between Johann and Caspar Plotz in Brzeg and the Plotz's living in Spiš and Šariš remain unclear. The Silesian origin of Johann Plotz seems to be quite certain, proved e.g. by the up to recently omitted abbreviation B.S. in his possessor's entry “Johannes Plotz. B. S. A[nn]o 1645 Ad. 10. Sept: | In Leutsch p. T. Organista” to be found in Johann Vogel's song-book Psalmen Davids (1638).²⁸ The abbreviation „B. S.“ after the name we can read as Bregen Silesius. The Silesian origins of Johannes Plotz is not mentioned, however, by the (otherwise very consistent) annalist of Levoča Caspar Hain. He noticed the entrance of Johann Plotz to the function of organist in 1642 like this: “Die 16. Februarij Ist an statt Herrn Apelles Herr Christophorus Werner Misnicus Cantor worden, vnd Herr Tobiasz Cruciger, an statt | Seiner Senior. So ist auch nach dem Johanni Pfadenhauer, Johannes Plotz worden.”²⁹ The account books register expenses to the favour of Johann Plotz for the first time in the first quarter of 1641: “p 4 Angaria dem Joh. Plotz Organista ... fl. 25 | It. dem Calcanten ... fl. 1”. “Johann (Hansz) Plotz” received from the town 25 (later 26) guilders quarterly, and also other occasional incomes (e.g. on 16th October 1648 he received a contribution of 2 guilders for purchase of firewood).³⁰ He received the last payment on 18th December 1648; the next sum of 7 guilders and 20 dinars was already paid to organist Samuel Marckfelner on 30th December 1648.³¹

Currently we have access to biographical data on and information about Johann Plotz's activities in Levoča from three sources: 1) municipal account books (1641–1648); 2) Caspar Hain's annals (1648, 1655); 3) such manuscript archival documents that have not been subject to research so far: two letters written to the municipal council of Levoča manu propria (14th December 1648, 16th December 1648, Fig. 1a, 1b),³² his signature as one of the witnesses in the testament of "Kattharina Wiesenbergerin gebohren Schwarzin" (1672, Fig. 2)³³ and the copy of his own testament dated in 1680 (Fig. 3a, 3b, 3c, 3d).³⁴

Both letters dated in 1648 were written by Plotz a fortnight before his departure from the post of the organist, in the days when a conflict between him and the municipal council broke out. In the letter he refers to his own rights anchored in the invitation letter (Vocation), according to which he was freed from paying taxes (Taxa). It seems that the situation turned as dramatic that it resulted in resignation of the organist from his post. The council paid him his last salary at the end of the current month and immediately terminated his contract. The seriousness of the situation is documented by a rather lengthy entry devoted to the matter by the annalist Caspar Hain:

Nevertheless, Johann Plotz did not quit Levoča in 1648. He continued to live in the town for the next 32 years. This is testified by a short notice in Caspar Hain’s annals dated 17th April 1656, according to which “der Organist Johann Plotz” was a troublemaker who was arrested by the municipal council for causing public nuisance.³⁶ The last evidence about Johann Plotz’s presence in Levoča can be found in his testament from 28th November 1680. This is the year of his decease.³⁷

³⁵ According to Caspar Hain’s Annals the organist submitted his own resignation, because of the taxes levied upon him. He was backed by the pastor in his Sunday sermon, when he sharply criticized the municipal council for this step. The council reprimanded the pastor, however, because of the Advent, they kept truce. The conflict between the church and the council lasted two more weeks, being ended by firing the organist by the council. BAL, Jeromos – FÖRSTER, Jenő – KAUFFMANN, Aurél. Ref. 17, pp. 238–239.

Condit. in Anno 1680. 28. Novembr."

We can learn from the testament that Johann Plotz had no wife or children that time. From siblings alive he mentions only his sister. We do not know his possible family relationship to the organist Georg Plotz, who died in Prešov in 1961. Moreover, the testament does not include any information about the estates of Johann Plotz, about his books, scores or musical instruments. Nothing of the musical works of Georg Plotz has been preserved, either, though we know positively that he certainly composed music. After his death in Prešov the notary produced an inventory of musicalia of the parish German church Catalogus Partium seu Librorum Musicorum ad Templum Eperjen[se] Parochiale (25th July 1661), part of which is also an inventory of musical pieces of Georg Plotz's estate – “Ex Legatione p[er] m[anus] Domini Georgii Plotschii”. This included manuscript copies of works by Johann Kusser, Alessandro Grandi and Johann Rovetta, prints of Johann Rosenmüller and Andreas Hammerschmidt, as well as three out of the four volumes of Geistlichen Concerten und Harmonien edited by Ambrosius Profius. Also are listed “Collectanea et Manu-Scripta Georgii Plotschii (NB. absque Basso Gen: ... l[ibri] 16)” and in the common part of the church's property other works of Georg Plotz are listed, most probably prints: “*Georgii Plotzchii Erster Theil des Geistliche[n] Musicalisch[en] Triebs ... l[ibri] 5.*³⁸

Musical repertory

Despite the richness of archival information on musical life in many urban communities of North-Eastern Slovakia, Levoča and Bardejov take the lead. Bardejov occupies an outstanding position because of the Lutheran Musical Collection, now deposited in Budapest; and Levoča because of the Lutheran Musical Collection preserved in situ. The Levoča Lutheran Musical Collection contains a common musical repertory of the European protestant area, including some unique pieces by lesser-known composers, in that number also musicians active in Spiš. Polyphonic and polychoral music can be found in prints, handwritten tablature-books and part-books. As many as 100 cori spezzati works by Gregor Lange, Jacob Regnart, Hans Leo Hassler, Jacob Handl-Gallus, Giovanni Pierluigi da Palestrina, Andrea and Giovanni Gabrieli from his Sacrae symphoniae 1597 (etc.) can be found in tablature books of Caspar and Johann Plotz from the turn of 17th century (MUS A 1, MUS A 2 olim 13990a, 13990b). The oldest prints containing early Baroque polyphony by German composers have been preserved in the Levoča Lutheran Musical Collection dated 1602–1620; they include Magnificat octo vocum and Cantiones sacrae of Hieronymus Praetorius, the Psalmen Davids (SWV 22–47) of Heinrich Schütz, etc.

The print of Heinrich Schütz's Psalmen Davids (1619) includes manuscript appendices with polychoral works of European and domestic composers: Giovanni Gabrieli, Asprilio Pacelli, Luca Marenzio, Matthäus Apelles von Löwenstern and Johann Schimrack senior (Ján Šimrák starší in Slovak language transcription). This organist of the German Lutheran Church in Spišské Podhradie (from 1630 to 1657) is actually one of the best-known composers of the first half of the 17th century active within the territory of North-Eastern Slovakia; together with Zachariáš Zarevúcky (Zacharias Zarevutius, 1605–1667), an organist in Bardejov, as well as Thomas Gosler, and Georg Wirsinger. The unique pieces by Thomas Gosler, Johann Schimrack senior and Georg Wirsinger, preserved in the Levoča Lutheran Musical Collection have been published in a critical edition series titled Musica Scepusii Veteris (in the first, the second and the ninth series). This project is conceived as an open set of independent series presenting early music related to the area of Spiš/Zips county covering the Early Modern Period until the 19th century. Each volume consists of an analytical study (in Slovak and German languages), a facsimile of the primary source, a transcription of the composition from German organ tablature notation, and a revision report.

Conclusion

The musical life in urban centres of North-Eastern Slovakia can be studied as a model example for the historical musicology in Central Europe. The musical life in this territory has always been an integral part of a religiously and ethnically diverse cultural development; besides Germans and Slovaks, smaller communities of Ruthenians, Jews, Poles, Hungarians (Magyars) and Roma lived here. Though towns in Spiš and Šariš were rather small, their geographic location, advanced urbanisation and prospering commerce provided a relatively safe environment for musical life in the early modern period. Two musical societies – Fraternitas Litteratorum and Collegium Musicum – existed in Spišská Nová Ves in the 17th century, combining the German tradition of Lutheran municipal cantorates with multi-ethnic Slovak-German musical environment. The stable plurilingual Lutheran urban milieu made possible an extraordinary extension of the period of polyphonic and polychoral music till 1674, which took place during the period of Thirty Years' War and confessional fragmentation elsewhere in Europe.³⁹
